By Leila S. Salaverria

OVER A POUND heavier and still healthy despite a host of sore eyes, Baby George Francis will soon be in the arms of his mother, who left him in an airplane's crash last night.

The mother, who has suffered through much anguish and sleepless nights since returning to the country, is now determined to raise the child as usually reported, Social Welfare Secretary Corason Soliman said yesterday.

Baby George's mother, Soliman said, had been raped and it was the DOJ's position that no charges should be pressed against her because she was a victim herself.

THE STRONGEST typhoon in the world this year hit the country making its way out of northern Luzon but its howling winds and continuous rains from Monday night to Tuesday morning left at least 12 people dead.

"Juan" is expected to leave the Philippine area of responsibility on Wednesday afternoon after slowing down in the South China Sea.

Many areas in northern Luzon remained without power and communication facilities a day after Super typhoon "Juan" (international code name) blew up over the region with gusts of 260 kph.

"The waves in Macosom were as big as houses and swamped the town plaza facing the Pacific Ocean," Isabela Gov Francisco Dy said over a text to his office on Monday.

Dy said water, food and medicine were desperately needed in Macosom, a village of about 4,000 people that remained isolated and only accessible by helicopter or by small boat.

Those people in Macosom drowned in the storm surge and many others were wounded on Monday, he said.

Truth commissioner allays fears of witch-hunt

By Christine N. Espenosa

A MEMBER of the Philippine Truth Commission yesterday allayed fears that its proceedings might turn into a witch-hunt against former President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, with a constitutional representative of Pangasinan, Commission Florida Ranesa, a noted Supreme Court associate justice, assured Newsquest she... like all other presidential representatives who might be invited to appear in the commission's hearings... would be "just another process of law."

"Definitely, there will be no witch-hunt," she told the Newsquest in a phone interview. "We are not concerned in the democratic rule of law to make it a witch-hunt."

"Specially for the three of us who came from the Supreme Court, even if we are subpoenaed, we are going to exercise due authority and power judiciously as we think it is no reason to worry," she added, referring to former Chief Justice Hilario Davide Jr., who heads the commission, and Commissioner Roberto Gallo Jr., also a former associate justice.

Ranesa said the commission's reports would not be limited to cases of alleged graft and corruption during Arroyo's nine-year rule from 2001 to June 2010. She said it could also cover cases that "spilled over" into the Arroyo regime from previous administrations.

The cited Section 17 of Executive Order No. 1, which created the five-member commission last July 20,

"if and when in the judgment of the President there is a need to expand the mandate of the Commission as defined in Section 1 thereof to include the investigation of cases and businesses of graft and corruption during the prior administrations," according to EO 1, "such trust may be a recommended accordingly by way of a supplemental executive order."

Ranesa's reply earlier said she was adopting a "wait-and-see" attitude, noting that the commission may yet to handle a person asking the high tribunal to declare it unconstitutional. In the meantime, the body had begun official work, not without any leading from Malacañang.

"Let's see how they will roll. Will they roll up, down, sideways? Let's see how they will work, how they will progress," Ranesa brushed them. Arroyo's chief of staff and spokesperson, said the bureau had welcomed.

Ranesa was optimistic that Arroyo would not boycott the process. "Everyone will be given her day in court. I think she will welcome the opportunity to assert her rights and be heard," the commissionist said.

During the commission's opening, the idea of coming up with a body to investigate graft and corruption when truth commissions in other countries covered more serious cases such as human rights violations.

Asked if alleged anomalies under the Arroyo administration could be accord equal in magnitude with, say, the spotlight regime in South Africa, Ranesa said the commission is not a "one-size-fits-all."

The commission is tasked to "investigate regimes of graft and corruption of national and magnitude that shook and affected the moral and ethical sensibilities of the people, nominated by public officers and employees, their co-principals, successors and associates from the private sector, if any, during the previous administration."

The body's Commission was patterned after commissions set up in more than 20 countries including Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Germany, Guatemala, Nepal, Nigeria, Peru, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Timor-Leste, Uganda, and Zimbabwe.

In a primer, the Philippine Truth Commission said each body works as a "discover, clarify and formally acknowledge" past issues, respond to specific needs and interests of victims, contribute to justice and accountability, ensure institutional responsibility and re-estimated relations, and promote reconciliation and reduce conflict over the past."

Stroke afflicts the young, too, says expert

By Cynthia D. Roberts

STROKE, which is termed a brain attack or the leading cause of death in the Philippines, also affects young people as a result of both or a combination of factors.

"It's something that happens to young, something in the brain process, something goes wrong," said Dr. Fernando Sagrado, a neurologist and board member of the Philippine Society of Neurology in Clinical Medicine, Inc., in explaining the prevalence of stroke in the young as to the cause of the stroke.

"It's a congenital defect. These are people born with abnormal blood vessels or an irregular distribution. In the child grows older, his or her blood vessels become very thin and fragile. The walls are thin. This is why stroke can affect and kill people from 15 years and below even with no known history of ailments, he said.

diagnosed with a heart ailment or have irregular heart rhythm, to have regular medical follow-ups to prevent the occurrence of stroke.

Sagrado said that stroke survivors have better skills and get better functional outcome if they are admitted to dedicated stroke units, staffed by experienced physicians, nurses and therapists.

Most persons that survive a stroke have some degree of post-stroke disabilities.

Although rehabilitation does not reverse brain damage, it can substantially improve function leading to better quality of life.

Persons who have had a stroke are in need of long-term follow-up for preventing strategies and future medical advice and regular diagnostic disabilities.

Mental health support stroke survivors may experience depression. To improve the quality of life and facilitate rehabilitation, it is essential that they have access to professional help and receive emotional support from their families and friends.

When stroke strikes

Stroke, also known as a brain attack or a cerebral vascular accident, occurs when blood flow to the brain is interrupted. When a stroke occurs, brain cells in the stroke area begin to die because they stop getting the oxygen and nutrients they need to function.

Stroke is still a disease of the elderly. Sagrado told the Manila Forum on "A New Hope for Stroke Patients" Tuesday which was organized by the Philippine College of Physicians in Quezon City in observance of the World Stroke Day on Oct. 28.

Therapeutic diets also play a significant role in stroke, he said. A person with a past family history of stroke would likely inherit a higher risk.

In this case, Sagrado advised family members from 15 to 30 years old with such history to undergo annual medical check-ups. He also recommended this for people in high risk areas.

Dr. Mervin Garcia, head of the Neurology Medicine Service at the St. Luke's Medical Center in Quezon City, said stroke occurs because 10 percent of people who had a stroke would have premonitory disability.

Stroke is considered a second of the most usual cardiovascular medical ailments.

"We haven't look for specific factors, but we are with the history of the patient, like if he or she has uncontrolled hypertension, having episodes of sudden loss of consciousness," he said.

Staggering stats

The statistics on the prevalence of stroke worldwide is staggering, Sagrado said.

One in 40 people worldwide will have a stroke in their lifetime, he said. Every six months, stroke kills someone; and every other second, stroke attacks a person regardless of age or gender.

Stroke, a total of 10 million people experience a stroke each year, an estimate of whom would not survive. About 10 million people have had a stroke, nearly having medical disabilities.

In the Philippines, he said, the latest statistic on this issue were conducted in 2004 and have showed a prevalence rate of 4 to 1.8 percent. In Asia, it is about 3 to 1 percent.

The World Stroke Organization (WRO) has called for immediate action to address the stroke epidemic by advocating a comprehensive, continuous approach, from prevention to treatment and secondary rehabilitation and long-term support.

Sagrado said that stroke is a medical emergency, and in such, people must have the warning signs. These include sudden numbness or weakness especially on one side of the body, sudden trouble speaking or understanding language, sudden trouble seeing in one or both eyes, or having trouble walking, sudden trouble walking and loss of balance, sudden dizziness, and sudden severe headache with no cause.

Stroke is key word

"The key word in stroke, it's a sudden phenomenon, and it is not something that has been happening on, for three months. If you notice any of these warning signs, you have to get to a hospital quickly," he said, adding that getting treatment within an hour can prevent disability.

Sagrado said that stroke can be prevented by addressing the personal risk factors—high blood pressure, diabetes, and high blood cholesterol.

He said that aspirin has a significant role in the treatment of stroke, not in preventing a stroke to a heart attack.

Sagrado stressed that steps to reduce the risk of stroke:

- Know your personal risk factors: high blood pressure, diabetes, and high blood cholesterol.
- Be physically active and exercise regularly.
- Avoid obesity by keeping in a healthy diet.
- Limit alcohol consumption.
- Avoid cigarette smoking. If you smoke, seek help to quit.
- Learn to recognize the warning signs of a stroke.

The WHO recommends that persons who have experienced a heart attack, have been

Baby George mom wants to take him home

According to Soliman, the woman's refusal to open herself up to a medical check, causing her pregnancy. The pregnancy prevented her employer's wife to attend her home, but she had not even been given her proper wages as a housekeeper in the Middle Eastern country. "She believes the child carried because her womb is too big so that she could take care of him. She strongly believes this," Soliman said. "The recommendation is that she is ready to care of the child. We just want to look at the syndrome and to prevent her health."

Soliman has chosen not to publicly disclose the name of the mother for reasons of privacy. The Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) is setting up a committee between mother and child in the coming days, and is listening to the mother's decision to take the child.

Cardinals community support

The woman will continue to receive counseling because of her refusal. It would be up to her if she wants to pursue the child against her former boss.

The woman's husband and other members of the family have opposed her decision to take the child home and want to adopt him, according to Soliman. Even the local community in the Cardinals, where the woman's family lives, has called around their, supporting her decision to bring Baby George home and understanding the circumstances that led to the woman's situation, Soliman said.

The community has decided to take care of the family and to keep quiet about the incident, which has been kept secret from the woman's new office young children.

'She wanted him to live'

DNA tests done by the National Bureau of Investigation and the National Science Foundation of the University of the Philippines have confirmed that the woman—who gave birth to Baby George on a Manila-based Gulf Air flight—is the boy's mother, Soliman said in a press briefing.

Social workers and psychologists at the DSWD have said it will be good for the woman's health and peace of mind to see her baby, she said. The woman has no much regret and claims over what had happened, she added.

Soliman also said the woman never had the intention of abandoning the baby and was planning to give him to another couple but she was unexpectedly refused to go home and he had to her giving birth on the plane.

"We understood that there are sometimes in a person's mind when you are desperate, that in your confusion you do the wrong thing. We think that is what happened. She really wanted the child to live. She did not plan to abandon him," Soliman said.

Because of this, the DSWD has decided a travel for mother and child together. DSWD-National Capital Region director Tina Lloren said department officials may assist the woman after Baby George returns home to care of him, which he got out of hand.

Mother's right

Soliman said she was inclined to support the mother's decision to take care of the child. Her mother option—taking the mother's claim against Baby George—will remain the said, adding the decision will depend on other factors like family and the DSWD.

"We all know that many want to give him a good home, aside from his mother but our view is the mother has a greater right to care for her child, especially if her situation is okay. It's the child's right to be with his own mother," Soliman said.

She said the DSWD would continue to monitor the boy's condition if it was found that he should live with his real family.

Baby George's mother is doing well, Soliman said. Initially, after being placed under DSWD custody she could not eat. She also had been afraid to sleep alone in the beginning.

But as the days went by, her condition improved. Now, she interacts well with other people and follows the rules of the center where she is staying, the DSWD said.

Search for mother

The woman's husband and her father, who have come to visit her, understand her situation. They made up a travel to return to the DSWD, Soliman said.

DSWD officials said the bond between Baby George's mother and her husband was strong and that he understood that his wife loved him very much.

The mother has also been giving her breast milk to her child, even if they have not met. Soliman said the mother had passed on her breast milk, and this was delivered to Baby George.

Baby George is also doing well. He is active, has a good feeding reflex and has no abnormal signs or symptoms, the DSWD said.

His weight has gone up to 3.6 kilograms.

The DSWD has given financial assistance to the family and will continue to provide them with counseling.

The discovery of the newborn baby in the Gulf Air plane's cockpit last last month shocked many and triggered an investigating.

Of sympathy for the infant, as well as efforts to adopt him, the boy named George Francis after Gulf Air's code name.

Failure to catch Lacson has DOJ chief red-faced

By Helen Dixon

JUSTICE Secretary John Ashcroft is being very red-faced as the government's inability to find fugitive Sen. Pacifico Lacson, whose whereabouts the department has the "slightest" inquiry.

"It is embarrassing that up to this point nobody knows where he is," De Lima said as his weekly media briefing at the justice department resumed.

De Lima noted that despite the confirmation of Lacson's pardon, an Interpol alert and advertisement do not mean Philippine embassies all over the world, nobody has found a trace of the ex-convict.

Lacson, a suspect in the 2000 murder of senatorial aide "Bobby" Daza and his driver, Emmanuel Coban, fled the country last January to escape arrest, claiming that he was being persecuted by the Arroyo administration.

Hiding in RP?

De Lima did not discount the possibility that Lacson is actually hiding out in the country, and that law enforcement may not have enough evidence to find him.

"The million-dollar question at this point is whether or not Lacson is in the country," she said.

De Lima said she has received information from Lacson's representatives which could lead to his location but she has not confirmed it.

She said the law-enforcement agency is the National Bureau of Investigation to coordinate with the FBI's continuing search for Lacson.

De Lima said that she had discussed Lacson's case with President Arroyo and had made her recommendations to him.

But she would not disclose what she said to the President.

Asked if Mr. Arroyo could grant Lacson an amnesty, she said, "Historically, any amnesty law that has been passed in the past has always apply to amnesty. But that is something that we need to further assess, if that is a political offense. What we know is that two people were killed."

Hates handcuffs

The justice secretary said she had been told by people claiming to be allies of Lacson that the young senator did not want to surrender even to the new Arroyo administration in that he could not stand being handcuffed and jailed.

"What I gather from certain people, those who claim to be allies of Senator Ping, is that the very reason why he does not want to show up at this point, is because he is afraid that the very idea of being handcuffed and put in jail, it's like he can't even imagine it happening," she said.

De Lima also said her office was still receiving reports that a former police officer has denied seeing a picture of Lacson in a police station. She said the police officer was Michael Ray Aguilera.

Aguilera, a former Lacson aide who is being detained in the US after being convicted for drug charges, was among those implicated in the Senatorial Aide's murder case. A US court has ordered that he be extradited to the Philippines to face the murder charges.

Viral info

De Lima said she would be meeting soon with the prosecution panel concerning their "last course of action" given the latest development on Aguilera.

Asked about the importance of Aguilera's extradition, De Lima said the ex-politician must have "very viral information" on the case, similar to former police officer Gato Marcelo Jr. and Glenn Domingo.

Marcelo and Domingo, who were also implicated in the senatorial murder and had fled to the US, have been extradited to the Philippines and have given information on the case to prosecutors.

Bloomfields' 'Rockumentary'

THE BLOOMFIELDS, one of the country's premier rock and roll bands, have on Oct. 20 at the Sunway Plaza Center First "Rockumentary" by their very own director of their long-running and iconic film. The video, which stars as it goes, also gives the band a much peek at the band's original stage that will support their upcoming album.

The band is unique in its music repertoire as it does not rely on "musical formulae" like the Beatles, The Rolling Stones, Led Zeppelin, and the Grateful Dead, but rather on the youthful spirit and talent of its members—Lance R. Hilly, Rocky Collins, Louis Ross, and Dave Pearson. The band's special about the "Rockumentary" is to expose (as the band is a corporation) social responsibility, to maintain its musical contributions to society through a support or participation in the housing project.

The program is featured with include the band's children to raise awareness for the needs of the deaf and other special children. It is the band's second year of returning to the community the funds of their gifts and skills in music and harmony.

HK court postpones Singson drug case

10/20/2010—A Hong Kong court Tuesday postponed a drug trafficking case against a Philippine lawmaker and music promoter, saying medical records "needed clarification."

Jap Donald Singson of Taiwan has been arrested by customs officers at Hong Kong's international airport in July and later charged with carrying a risk of toxins weighing about 30 grams (3.5 ounces) on his hand luggage.

His lawyer, John Headland, asked the district court to adjourn the case Tuesday as they were waiting for "a specialist's clarification" of Singson's medical records.

Judge Peter Gwynne adjourned the case until Nov. 22 and dismissed Singson's bail. The lawmaker has paid one million Hong Kong dollars (128,000 U.S. dollars) and two bonds paid another one million dollars as security.

Headland refused to talk to reporters outside the court.

The case was previously adjourned to July when Singson said he was unable to sit, for a spinal because he was undergoing neck and shoulder.

Singson, 41, has a Manila film star girlfriend and juggles two jobs promoting DJ rhythms and shows acts in the southeast Asian country while holding a seat in the House of Representatives.

He was a second three-year term in May at the seat long held by his family in the House.

The legislator is one of seven children by an unmarried wife of Singson. His previous political career in the Philippines.

The 40-year-old party leader was in Hong Kong in August to attend his mother's funeral, and denied at the time that his son was a drug dealer.

"Shut up," he told reporters.

In Hong Kong, the maximum penalty for trafficking a drug weighing in a fine of five million HK dollars (594,000 U.S.) and life imprisonment.

Pagasa: Team RP proves world wrong

recorded at least 21 people dead in south and southeast Luzon. Benito Barnes, senior director of the National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Council, said 18 were confirmed dead and six injured. (See story on Page A1.)

Tropical aid government expenditures and people's responsibility helped ease, said the Japanese Super typhoon "Yanagi" which made landfall in Iloilo province on Monday.

"Typhoon Yagani showed you Team Philippines," he said at a briefing in Manila today.

Conversations

President Aquino commended Pagasa and the departments of science and technology, natural resources, and environment, and the national disaster council.

"I am very happy to report to the public that everyone has delivered. The strength proper action of all concerned agencies are for mankind common to the official independence of the past, and at present, we haven't had to ask the public to contribute outside resources," the President said.

In a statement read by his spokesperson, Edwin Laramba, the Aquino said Pagasa is also bulletin on the coming storm early and do not of the increasingly informed public of its place as early as Friday, September 24 at 10:00.

"To date, the needs of affected communities are being met. The damage and loss of life could have been much greater had we not prepared for the storm," the Aquino said.

He said the actions of the government and the people showed what could be accomplished when "we all cooperate to anticipate the needs of our people."

Taniguchi said that as predicted by Pagasa forecasters, Japan provided bullets with winds of 125 kilometers per hour, gusts of 200 mph and rain in the 50-to-60 millimeter an hour range similar to last year's Super typhoon "Ondoy."

"The good thing about this is you can't underestimate typhoons covering the country but the loss of lives—considering this is the strongest in the world, was basically avoided," Taniguchi said.

He said the minimal loss of lives is due to not only the national and local governments and civil society in response to the storm but also by individuals and families who heeded the warnings.

"They really made the difference," he said.

Hourly updates

Taniguchi said Pagasa "even beat on the hour" monitoring of Juan helping Iloilo from getting caught up in the storm.

He said international weather agencies and even Pagasa's own models on Monday all pointed to Juan making landfall in Cagayan.

"All the international centers and all the numerical models showed that (Juan) would hit Iloilo and not Cagayan. But the every-hour-on-the-hour monitoring of Pagasa showed that it is actually down that it was going southeast," Taniguchi said.

At 11 p.m., Jon Sweeney, Pagasa was the only agency that showed Juan is not going to Cagayan. It will actually hit Iloilo," he added.

Courage of Pagasa

Taniguchi lauded the courage of Pagasa personnel for following the indications of their hourly watch instead of adopting the findings of the international agencies and the weather bureau's forecasting models.

"To look a lot of courage among the young people of Pagasa to actually make that kind of decision because the national government was really depending on these young people," he said.

"They said it would not hit Cagayan but Iloilo. Then, lo and behold, the young people were correct," he said.

Taniguchi said Pagasa began to monitor Juan's path as early as Friday on its Super typhoon.

Disappointed

A few days into his administration, the Aquino expressed his disappointment over Pagasa's forecast of the path of Typhoon "Yagani" that proved way off the mark.

Having now forecast to take a route to the north but actually hit Metro Manila.

The President, during a meeting of the disaster management council, told Pagasa officials that its performance was unacceptable. He asked them whether anyone had in the past been able to do this.

At Taniguchi's public briefing, Pagasa Deputy Administrator Nolasco Hernandez said the weather bureau continued to monitor Juan even if it was heading away from the country.

Most houses destroyed

Records said the storm was expected to be one of the strongest since late night on early this morning.

Increasing the damage wrought by the super typhoon, Juan hit all portions of the houses in Iloilo, Misamis, and Marikina in Iloilo province were wiped out, including a warehouse along National Road Marikina City.

He said 2,000 of 4,000 houses of the island were got hit and as a result were considered safe for consumption. (See related story on Page A1.)

Barnes said the national disaster council was still assessing the extent of the damage caused by the typhoon.

Assurances

The work of bringing life back to normal is the most possible time is already underway," the Aquino said.

He assured the public that the power utilities were doing their job to bring back electricity to the affected areas.

"For areas where power supply was that disaster a preliminary measure, the utilities are now ground up to ensure power as much as they have been able to properly assess the damage and assess repairs," the Aquino said.

The President said the departments of Social Welfare and Development was allocating more than 4,000 vehicles. "They have been able to attend to the needs of affected communities because of the preparation of supplies and equipment," he said.

The US government is set to release $100,000 in disaster relief assistance to the victims of the typhoon, the US Embassy in Manila said yesterday.

The President who called on government agencies to work the same conditions in the wake of the super typhoon expressed his confidence in those who have been able to mitigate the disaster's effects.

"Let us extend my deepest sympathies to the families of those who have lost loved ones in this super typhoon," the Aquino said. PHN reports from Jerry E. Espinosa

A century of sowing seeds of faith, education in Ifugao

By Helen Garcia
Bangor, Ifugao

AT 51, Jose Galapagan is one of the many living reminders to the life and work of the late Belgian Catholic priest, Jerome Moorman, whose education to the Ifugao people has transcended generations.

"He loved Ifugao so much. In return, he was very much loved and respected by our people," he said.

Galapagan remembers one day after World War II when Moorman asked him to run the priest's house, the wanting to change the priest, he obliged. "When I was done, I was nervous to have realized that I made such a mistake of his house," he said.

Moorman looked at his new house on a street, then said: "It looks like the Ifugao are happy. It's beautiful, like it."

"He was very much loved of the (Ifugao) people. He was very much like family to us, like a true father to all of us," said Galapagan, his face glowing with worshipful memories to Ifugao people's history.

Moorman was at the spotlight of this year's centennial celebration of the Catholic mission in Ifugao, widely regarded as the official establishment of the Catholic faith in Ifugao.

On Oct. 15-17, the town's faithful remembered the achievements of Moorman and all other priests, and by people of the Congregate Jesuit Order (CJ) and the Congregation of the Missionaries of Mary—a sign of love, compassion and dedication, which opened 100 years.

Saturday was a special day. Residents in native costume and visitors gathered around the town, danced, sang and listened to a grand celebration celebrating with Moorman's 100th anniversary.

Community sharing

And in Ifugao, the celebration would be complete without the scene of a community sharing the "bunado," a native rice cake wrapped in banana leaves.

"More than anything else, what we are doing... is to say of giving thanks to the first Moorman and the CJM for what they have done for the people of Ifugao and Bangor. Everything that you are here today, we owe... to them," Gov. Ifugao Bantolero said.

A statue was given to Moorman and others 100-CJCM priests who, for their years, have been sowing the seeds of faith and education to Catholics in Ifugao, served as the local spiritual guide, teacher, doctor, nurse and community leader.

Roots

As a young priest, Moorman set foot in the mountain community in 1916. Like some Catholics before, the Ifugao people used to be known for their headhunting practice.

While other Catholic priests before him failed, Moorman stood out on his mission to help them. He encouraged the adoption of strong local resistance, the threat of disease, language barrier and the aging World War II.

Often riding on horseback, he and other CJCM missionaries traveled to the remote mountain villages to spread the faith. In one town, Moorman befriended the people and convinced them to abandon their pagan practices and accept Christianity.

With meager funds coming from donations, materials from the townships and labor drawn by the volunteers' passion to get closer to God, Moorman built the first parish church in Ifugao, just a century later.

In 1920, Moorman and the CJCM team established the first elementary school, from a high school. From his missionary, he was highly respected and admired in Manila, Baguio and other areas.

True love

"He showed true love for the people, that never makes a bad day. He never stopped working," by leader Lyla de Castro said.

Ifugao would become Moorman's home for the next 40 years of his priestly life, and beyond. He died on Oct. 15, 1958, in Manila, but was brought back home to Ifugao. His body lies at the foot of the Holy Joseph Church, which also houses the Father Jerome Moorman Museum.

So deep was the influence of the missionaries' work in Ifugao that through generations, their teachings, given from the people and to the Christians, have remained ingrained in the hearts and minds of the people.

Moorman's relations expressed deep appreciation to the Ifugao people for the attention they have given to him. As a child, Anne Marie Flores, a great-granddaughter, brought with her Moorman's 100-year-old statue, which he used during his first Mass in Ifugao a century ago, and donated it to the town's church.

"Father Moorman would have wanted the statue, which was given to him as gift for his ordination in 1908, to be donated by the last member of the family who would become a priest. Sadly, no one did so," Flores said.

Since Moorman's death, the statue was kept by his sons, who, in his will written in 1939, decreed that it be turned over to Ifugao.

"Take good care of it and we hope it will bring more blessings to the community," Flores said.

A STATUE of the late Belgian priest Jerome Moorman stands proudly of Ifugao, Ifugao, of his role in introducing Catholicism to the island province 100 years ago.

Sketch of bar exams grenade-thrower out

Man's identity still a mystery

By Jeanevee L. Andrade

THE NATIONAL Bureau of Investigation (NBI) released yesterday an artist's sketch of the man who threw a grenade at a group of revellers on the last day of the bar examinations on Sept. 26.

The man is known to be 1.65 tall, 50 kg, with dark hair, dark eyes, and a serious expression. He is about 40 years old.

At a press conference, NBI Deputy Director for Special Investigation, Genaro P. Garcia, said the sketch was based on witness descriptions of the grenade-thrower.

Garcia, however, said the witnesses did not see if the man had a companion who helped him run away after the attack.

"This is the only person they saw at the time," he said.

At the same time, Garcia said the NBI had yet to identify the man in the sketch.

Based on the sketch and the description given by the witnesses, the grenade-thrower was around 20 to 25 years old, about 1.65 to 1.75 tall, of medium build and with light brown complexion.

NBI spokesperson Special Agent Corina Jimenez said the bureau had yet to see it on a specific motive for the grenade attack.

"We have yet to conclude the investigation. We do not want to make any single case," he explained.

NBI, church tell 2 MPD stations: Move out of lots

By Jeanevee L. Andrade

TWO LOT owners—the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) and the Sto. Antonio Church—have asked the Manila Police District (MPD) to stop squatting on their property.

But MPD officers in charge, Chief Insp. Benjamin Pangasinan, said yesterday that he was not keen on giving in to the NBI's demand.

He said the 2,400-sq m lot on St. Antonio Church MPD Station 3 is located.

There is a fence around the lot, which automatically makes a property squatted by the MPD (Philippine Bureau of Police) officers on Sept. 26.

Pangasinan told the NBI that he would enter the matter in the MPD legal department.

"We have to control that. There is a government-owned and not built work for the government," he said.

As for the MPD on lot in Sto. Antonio Church, Pangasinan said the MPD has no choice but to move out.

"We have to vacate that site because it is owned by the church and is considered private property," he told the Inquirer.

The added that he would hold a dialogue with church officials on Oct. 23, regarding the lot on Plaza Mayor Street.

41 dead in Vietnam floods; 19 missing

HANOI—Efforts to find a boat with 19 people swept away by high waters were hampered by raging currents on Tuesday in central Vietnam as the country's overall death toll from flooding and heavy rains reached 41, officials said.

Beyond other people on the boat seems to safely in areas around after clinging to trees and power poles. The boat was pulled off the main highway while waiting for the central government of Gao Thang in the southern province of Nam Dinh early Monday morning, said Phan Van Duk, a local police chief.

The boat happened a police roadblock diverting traffic from the highway, which was covered by up to 60 centimeters of water. The 4-hour survival and was being spent time by police, but not.

The military was using aerial detectors to search for the boat, but its efforts have been unsuccessful.

The boat's captain was not among making the search operation very difficult," Duk said by telephone from his Vinh province, where he is police chief of High-Speed City.

Among the survivors were Luong Hanh Thanh, 32, and his 3-year-old daughter. The father was on two hours in the strong current, clinging to his child before he managed to swim to safety.

"We were sleeping when the storm occurred, saying promises to catch children," Thanh was quoted by Thanh Hoa newspaper as saying. "I held my daughter tight and got out of the boat in panic. I even saw one head and another hand holding on daughter."

Deaths in Nghe An, Ha Tinh and Quang Binh provinces, WILLOWERS navigate through floodwaters in a village in central Vietnam.

Flooding has killed 40 people while 190,000 people in the province have been affected, disaster officials said. Another person was killed in Thanh Hoa Province from a relatively up to 120 centimeters of rain poured the central region over the past week, affecting 100,000 houses and forcing 142,000 people to flee, according to the national flood and drought center.

Central Vietnam also suffered other areas of flooding but the search for the boat.

There was no report in some areas of the cost of the region on Tuesday morning. Floodwaters, though they were slowly receding in some areas.

Forecasters predicted that a super typhoon, which formed in the Philippines on Monday, would likely hit southern China and central Vietnam.

Meanwhile, state media reported on Tuesday that the military would attempt to rescue the 19 people on the boat. The army is still stuck in the region of Fuzhou, islands in the South China Sea over Taiwan. "We'll persist," it said.

The fishermen had been driven by China but were later released. They were taken back to the islands on Saturday by a Chinese patrol boat. The rescue effort still shows that the islands are near the path of typhoon Wutip.

HSBC sees peso gaining to 41 to $1

Easing of Bangko Sentral rules to have little impact

By Michelle K. Remo

HSBC's HSBC and Bangkok Banking Group sees the peso rising further to 41 against the dollar by the end of the year, saying inflows of foreign capital are expected to remain robust in the remaining months of 2014.

Jose Antonio Wilson, head of treasury for the Philippines of HSBC, told reporters yesterday that the bank's economic research unit estimated the local currency to appreciate at least 3 percent by the end of the year to 41:1.

The foreign exchange manager of HSBC, which has secured the surge in foreign capital inflows so far this year. The increase in inflows of dollar and other foreign currencies comes on the back of a bullish outlook on the Philippine economy, which was announced last month, and is seen faster than the government's official target of between 3 and 6 percent.

HSBC forecasted the rise of the peso is being countered by a plan by the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas to liberalize the regulatory environment for inflows of foreign capital. Wilson said that even if the BSP imposed rules that would encourage inflows of foreign capital, the peso was expected to remain strong. He said there was no significant number of investors who would take their money out of the country.

"Although the BSP can open the door to encourage inflows, not much capital is expected to go out of the country as every body wants to stay," Wilson said.

The Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas earlier reported that "net foreign inflows reached $1.41 billion in the last nine months of the year, more than six times higher than the $229.12 million registered in the same period a year ago.

The increase in foreign portfolio investment, mostly in the form of inflows into the country's stock market, is consistent with the rise in foreign capital inflows to other emerging economies in Asia.

Market analysts and the inflows going to Asia was partly due to the favorable economic growth prospects for the region and to the industrial growth of industrial countries led by the United States.

Gov't asset sale seen raising P2B

By Rosalyn W. Domingo

THE GOVERNMENT has raised between P100 million and P200 million from the privatization of small-scale assets, according to Finance Undersecretary John Philip Sevilla.

Sevilla, who is also a full member of the board of directors of the Department of Finance, said a small-scale P100 million from the privatization of small-scale assets is expected.

"We expect to raise the P2 billion that we are targeting to raise this year," he said. While the proportion up on the block represented "small investments, we are confident we could utilize other loans before the end of the year."

Earlier this year, Malabon decided to defer the privatization of three big ticket assets including a big chunk of the food terminal in property in Taguig City and the government's share in the Malabon water-gas project as well as the house of representative property. "Idagay."

These three properties were expected to raise some P10 billion, which could help keep down the budget deficit.

Sevilla said the government expected to put the P10 billion on the market this year, adding that the 120 hectares property could account for the bulk of anticipated privatization revenues next year.

He said that while the latest appraisal placed the value of the P10 billion at P10 billion, the government expected to raise less than that amount considering that privatization has failed in the past.

Telcos move to restore services

Push to cut perks gains ground

By Ronald M. Domingo

Globe, Smart report minimal typhoon damage

By Paolo G. Manalo

TELECOMMUNICATIONS services bogged down in areas hit by Typhoon Juan (International name: Wipac) due to the loss of power caused by damaged power lines.

But local phone lines and damage to their own networks were kept to a minimum thanks to lessons learned from last year's Tropical Storm Ondoy and Typhoon Pepeng, and that their services would be fully restored as soon as the power supply to the affected areas resumed.

"Even during the height of Typhoon Juan, only 10 percent of our facilities (e.g. cell sites) in Northern Luzon were adversely affected, mostly due to the loss of commercial power. Services there were not working."

In a separate statement, NCC Communications Inc. said its services remained uninterrupted. However, the lack of power left some areas without coverage.

"We've designed our network so that we couldn't have cell sites with smaller indoor or even level cell sites. Our large cell sites have their own generators so they continue to operate," the company said.

However, its smaller sites are reliant on commercial power. "Their work has been ongoing since peaking, immediately after the typhoon hit the area. Restoration of full service levels will however depend on the extent of adequate power supplies."

Meanwhile, the National Telecommunications Commission (NTC) said it had opened up the emergency radio frequencies that governments and private-sector groups can utilize to coordinate search and rescue efforts on the ground.

5 prospective oil, gas sites up for exploration

By Amy R. Ramo

UP TO five exploration wells are expected to be drilled off Cebu and Palawan next year to give investors an idea of the resources trapped in the prospective oil and gas fields, said Energy Undersecretary Ramon Alar V. Das.

According to Das, the companies that are expected to drill include Australian firm Delta Petroleum Ltd., Hong Kong-based Polaris Petroleum International Co. Ltd., Houston Energy Ltd., and China International Mining Corporation Co. Ltd.

Das and Maranan Energy Ltd. would drill a well at the East Wagon basin covered by Service Contract (SC) 31. The 350,000-barrel field outside the Agao and Sabon prospects, Agao flows into other fields.

Drilling of the marine gas program alone, which is expected to cost some $30 million, may yield at least 200 million barrels of recoverable oil in the company. Based on the company's studies, part of the Agao prospect may even have eight levels, each containing up to 300 million barrels of oil.

Drilled Petroleum will also drill a petroleum exploration well at the General Santos basin, which is covered by Service Contract 76.

At the end of 2009, the country's total potential oil and natural gas resources had been estimated at 8,995 billion barrels of oil equivalent.

Amending Epira won't solve power woes, says expert

By Abigail L. No

AMENDING PARTS of RA 9261, or the Electric Power Industry Reform Act, is not the solution to the country's power woes, according to energy industry experts, who maintain that better implementation of the law may prove to be shorter fix.

Speaking to members of the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Indo-Asean Oil and Energy Development Corp. president and former Energy Secretary Francisco Viray said amending the law at this crucial time was "not advisable."

"Amendments to make up for the deficiencies of the law may have to be done some time. (But) amendments will not address the current situation, and then cannot be passed overnight," he said.

Former National Telecommunications Commission and now San Miguel Global Private Holdings Corp. president Mar Ochoa added that even if the law were to be amended now, it would be impossible to have the new version of the law passed within the time of the current administration. Instead of concentrating on amending the law, Ochoa said, the industry would be better off doing something to address the problem of lack of capacity.

He cited San Miguel Global's plan to put up 2,000 megawatts in new capacity "as quickly as we can make it."

Also, Renato Rodriguez, president of the Philippine Independent Power Producers Association, said the group would put on its position not to change the current law.

"We are against any Epira amendments. The root cause of the problem is in regulations and laws. Amendments will only create an economy among companies," he said in a separate presentation.

Dollar inflows pushed Sept. BOP to new high

Investors' bias for emerging markets also cited by BSP

By Michelle V. Reyes

THE SURPLUS in the country's balance of payments (BOP) hit a record high of $3.06 billion in September, a result partly of a new recording system and a host of other factors, such as the surge in foreign portfolio investments and additional loans contracted by residents from abroad.

Data from the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas showed that the BOP surplus in September was more than three times higher than the $0.11 billion recorded in the same month last year.

Above $3.1 billion of the increase, however, was accounted for by the quota allocation for the Philippines by the International Monetary Fund (IMF). Countries that are members of the IMF are given quota allocations by the institution.

But even if the quota allocation by the IMF is excluded, the remaining $1.96 billion was still more than three times higher than the surplus in September last year.

For the first nine months, the BOP surplus stood at $6.34 billion, up 48 percent from $4.3 billion in the same period last year.

BSP Governor Amanda Tordesillas said that besides the new system of computation of the BOP, the rise in the BOP surplus was also due to the foreign exchange operations of the BSP and the foreign currency-denominated loans obtained by the national government.

Given the appreciation of the peso in the past year, the BSP's foreign exchange reserves from the foreign exchange market to manage the local currency's rise. Market players speculate peso could have even become stronger if not for the intervention of the BSP in the foreign exchange market.

The national government also tapped loans from the foreign exchange market to support its stimulus programs and to pay off outstanding obligations.

The BSP chief likewise said the increase in the BOP surplus was also due to the rising investments in investments issued from the Philippines.

"The development was partly a reflection of the global shift of capital flows into emerging markets, including the Philippines," BSP Governor Amanda Tordesillas said in a statement.

The Philippines is often among emerging markets in Asia have been experiencing a surge in foreign capital inflows, largely in the form of portfolio investments, on the back of a bullish growth outlook on the economies in the region.

Power plant, oil depot get BOI approval

By Abigail L. Ho

A $200 power plant and oil depot worth a combined P1.1 billion have secured approvals from the Board of Investments for various fiscal and non-fiscal incentives.

Petron Corp. is putting up a P200-M dollar solid-fuel-fired power plant in Linao, Bataan, the output of which will mainly be used to power the operations of the oil firm's Bataan refinery.

Of the plant's total 79 megawatts (MW) capacity, Petron said 61 percent would supply the refinery's power requirements, while the remaining 18 percent would be sold to the grid via bilateral supply contracts, possibly with the Manila Electric Co. and other electric companies.

The power facility will have coal as its primary fuel, but will also use petroleum coke, whichever is generally a cheaper fuel source.

According to Petron, the plant will be commissioned by July 2012 and will employ 79 individuals.

The BOI also approved the organization of Phoenix Petroleum Philippines Inc. for

Lender plans to double loans extended to RP

By Michelle K. Barco

THE WORLD Bank intends to double the loans it extends to the Philippines, saying it is eager to help the Aquino administration sustain its economic growth targets.

But Philippine, country representative of the World Bank to the Philippines, said in a press conference yesterday that the bank's officials and the government's economic team recently discussed the details of the foreign lender's assistance in the Philippines for 2012.

He said the new parties had already agreed on some projects, and that the World Bank would be able to increase the amount of loans extended to the Philippines to help accelerate growth of the domestic economy.

"We are looking at doubling the assistance from last year," Hoffman said.

Under the World Bank's country assistance strategy (CAS) for the Philippines, it agreed to fund projects worth $700 million and $1 billion for 2010.

One of the CAS projects the World Bank agrees to finance for 2011 is the Regional Infrastructure Growth Project (RIGP), for which the bank may extend $250 million (about P1.6 billion).

Under the project, the World Bank will release the money to the Development Bank of the Philippines which, in turn, will use it to fund various infrastructure projects around the country.

Another project the World Bank is keen on funding is the rehabilitation of the Manila to fly and the enhancement of the country's baggage disposal system.

"We are also looking at providing additional support for the CCT (Conditional Cash Transfer Program)," Hoffman said.

Under the CCT, the government will extend monthly allowances to some of the poorest households, enabling the poor to reap the benefits of a growing economy.

The program is a response to the problem of poverty in the Philippines, where the rate of economic growth had not trickled down to the poor.

Active recipients of the subsidies will be required to send children to school, while mothers must regularly visit health centers.

According to Hoffman, the World Bank believes that the expansion of CCT to cover as many of the poor as households as possible will help reduce poverty incidence in the country, which is estimated at about a third of the population.

Also, the World Bank is willing to support the Aquino administration's Public-Private Partnership (PPP) program, Hoffman said.

Under the program, the government will solicit investments that the private sector for the development of public infrastructure.

The World Bank may play a role in this by providing government loans to be used by private firms to fund infrastructure projects.

"We can provide some guarantees to support private investments in public infrastructure projects. We have done this in other countries, and we can do this in the Philippines," Hoffman said.

Philippine Petroleum also sells its products via its own retail services, primarily located within Metro Manila, as well as on wholesale basis to other commercial and industrial customers, mostly in Zamboanga.

The state depot will start commercial operations by next month, generating 13 new jobs.

Projects granted pioneer status, such as the Petron and Philippine Petroleum projects, will enjoy with some income tax breaks, five-free importation of capital equipment, plus other fiscal and non-fiscal perks.

How to sell your car for a good price

By Beachi Santos

WITH THE car and road guides on how to buy a good, used second-hand car for a bargain, but I have yet to read an article about a proper selling guide for car owners who want to move on and upgrade to the newest and latest model. Understood that this short guide isn't about oversteering your car's flaws and any mechanical weakness it might have suffered, to the real, transparency and honesty, you want the best possible, you want the buyer to trust you, and also be you to show that you know invested your car at any point by giving it good care. A lot of these tips aim to enhance the impression of owner care and attention was given to your car, that this sales guide can be used as well when buying a car, just switch your perspective and it all makes sense.

1 Record your car's full service history. Reading through service magazines, while most cars are for sale, profit when are the accepted PDI. This service history history turned all the work done on your car (PMS servicing, body and rollover work, key components replacement like alternator, transmission, engine parts etc) in a single document complete with dates, what was changed, where or who changed it and the matching receipts from the dealership or your favorite independent service shop. Keep this in a folder and present them in the folder as any prospective buyer. Also, record the type of fluids you used for your car, how often you changed them (oils and what), was the last time you changed them, the use of high-performance, high-quality and better than OEM fluids such as oils, brakes, clutch and power steering. Such is a sign of good owner love.

Some people take it further and create an MS Excel file to log every maintenance they've done on the car as well. This is a good idea for car purposes since you can save up all your expenses and charge them when you're ready.

2 Clean it inside and out, inside by a professional detailer.

I have seen so many fully loaded cars with the widest audio-video systems installed, the biggest and widest wheels, the most impressive sport-type bucket seats with matching 4-point harness on show-offy cars that sound up being for sale, the owner wanting to unload the car to embark on a new project. There's one problem. Due to lack of general, everyday use. These cars tend to have a bulky smell, a sign of high humidity somewhere inside the car due to humidity, which is quite frankly unsuitable in any very hot and humid country. Prospective buyers tend to avoid these cars because the smell is a sign of neglect on the owner's part. It might be a pretense to show more maintenance, but it's not.

Like most with the car, the car that has so many added-on body parts like wheel body kits, alternator wheels, carbon fiber body, custom and custom wheels tend to age poorly over time. Both custom parts and the car, when exposed to the elements wear poorly and fade, bubble or crack. The last thing you do is to remove them and bring the car back to stock, or have a professional detailer or paint and body shop remove the fit and finish on the car.

Get it all done in a professional manner that the quality of work is of the highest possible quality. The car looks really clean, smooth and smells good. Once done, be careful whenever you use it until it's sold.

Don't forget to have the engine bay professionally cleaned as well. A clean engine bay means you regularly popped the hood to check on the engine and its condition, a reassuring sign for the buyer.

3 If your car is modified, keep all the old, stock parts and put them back up when you decide to sell the car, or tell the potential buyer that you have all the stock parts in safekeeping which you can turn over to them once the car is sold.

Get really into aftermarket wheels? That's fine, use 2004 dry-carbon hood and cap (not adjustable and never from Amazon) tires (not from you and me, but it might not be so expensive in some and look for a new rule for the 2004). All these aftermarket components will not add any pressure to your car when you're selling it to a fellow enthusiast.

Waiting for Euro IV fuel

LARRY WHEAT, at a media forum, gives speaker Hanson J. Sipe, secretary of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR), gives an overview to the audience group just now: Larry (a quality standard diesel fuel with a low sulfur content of 50 ppm/part per million) is less well known, as noted in Motor Vehicle—if the records in preserving the Department of Energy (DOE) to allow its integration by small players in the oil industry.

Page said that since only 50 percent of activities are petroleum in Mexico (Mexico's major fossil fuel industry), the oil industry's contribution to the country's economic growth is not as high as it is in the United States. He said that Mexico's oil industry is not as profitable as it is in the United States, and that the country's oil industry is not as competitive as it is in the United States.

low stomach acid), suffer with acid and mucous membranes inside the gut that directly contribute to acid rain, and environmental degradation, including diesel exhaust levels in many health problems including headaches, respiratory ailments, asthma and lung irritation, acids have affecting growth in children.

Exercice

In 1976, when, 600 gpa; was the legal requirement imposed in the UK, the Philippine legal requirement was 1mm ppa; . That is it was 60:60 percent by weight or 500 gpa (bars) & standard incidence one mm.

NYS has progress towards attaining the same standard during the next 14 years. Page discussed that the UMI has extended the life of legal requirements for allowed lead in the Philippines to 2010 whereas previously Euro II would have been required by 2007. Japan has introduced Euro Line Sulfur Limit (350) to US standards and will require that their countries become an additive. As of August 2010, diesel fuel stations in the United States were transitioning to ULSD following the finding that the emission systems of diesel vehicles manufactured seriously damaged by routine use of non-PSA.

ON THE ROAD

But should a developing country like the Philippines accept for itself diesel fuel that Europe (where Euro 3 is in use) uses 10 ppm to standard and Japan and the US require? At the Chem Air Institute for Asian Cities (CIAC) seminar, in the Philippines, diesel is widely used in public transport vehicles including jeeps that give higher levels of particulate matter and nitrogen oxides due to the lack of proper vehicle maintenance and their lack of particulate and nitrogen oxide traps and can burn nitrogen and quality standards.

This point was also used by Singapore's anti-Japanese marketing star, pseudonymous Bobby Estampé, in a telephone interview. Estampé contended that even if improperly maintained, diesel vehicles like public utility jeeps were not as toxic as diesel trucks, which sell more easily.

will both subside hydrocarbon, nitrous oxides and particulate emissions of the power plant. He said that the sulfur will meet the 2 percent CMI (combined metal content) requirement set by the DOE. Shell and the other oil majors have no objections to the small players importing less than 1% diesel, less so far as they are concerned, there is no market for these 1% diesel in the Philippines now since that is only a couple hundred cases that country burns.

CPD®

On the other hand, since many affordable vehicles with modern CAFE-compliant fuel and emissions ratings have made it to the market today and since the number of CAFE vehicles is growing fast, I think that the oil industry should move up-to-speed if there is at least even a 1% loss, then 100 ppm sulfur is a vast better, to 100 compliance. Modern diesel engines require diesel fuel that has less than 100 ppm sulfur content. By the way, I don't think it is reasonable for your report to call the 100ppm, 150 and 230 and the 3.5 loss more or less diesel oil, that's why they

Which reminds me that when GAZI Motors began importing diesel Mercedes-Benz cars, I was surprised to learn that they bought fuel from Israel, a minor player. Not so: Israel announced in September 2008 that it would offer for the next six months Euro V diesel with diesel-oxo (combustion-pollution) smaller of 51, having secured an 11,000-tonne supply contract for its importation. This, by now that supply of Euro V diesel must have been sold out.

Practising

Meanwhile, Philippine Shell says in a position paper that it backs the long-term goal to reduce sulfur as fuel to support the use of advanced refinery technologies like Euro IV non-petroleum vehicle, but it also stresses the economic implications of changing its fuel parameters and the need to balance air quality improvement against profitability and cost of investment. Thus, to meet the Euro IV standard in 2004, Shell had to increase its oil Philippine refinery that the cost was moderate compared to the massive spend elsewhere needed to modify and rebuild further the sulfur content of diesel from 100 ppm to 50 ppm. The reconfiguration, per rough estimates, might increase the production cost of diesel by 1.6 to 1.8 dollars per barrel—and this will surely be passed on to the consumer at retail.

In the GM program case, to meet Euro IV targets there is an obviously technological and technical barrier to fuel quality and vehicle technology, not just the distance of one in theory, rather it is a substantial proportion of different sub-issues. The rules of various technologies and the expense means of fuel quality to achieve the end-goal of a cleaner environment have to be considered. Over time, the DoT allows sulfur content in diesel fuel to remain high in order to keep the pump price low. Never mind the cost to the environment and public health.

He continues with Robert Rush, who is quoted by the Old as saying: "We polemicize our environment. We get exactly what we deserve. How can we arrest a life we've created out of control? What is blame, what is credit, but no? Who can change it anytime we wish, but not?"

Before you rush to conclude that the leap for the "small things in life" is a full-on phenomenon, thought about, no doubt, by the wondrous traffic-lighting Edeas and the subtle increases in Paul Price's eyes, we note that, for tensely self-conscious you, here's a closer look at the writings on the traffic-light salesmen on the magazine originating from the United States. Car and Driver and Road and Track, both as shown, can in American magazines go, are selling more and more services, positive and about education.

It is quite fascinating when you read an American car magazine describe the European preference for small cars, and compare it to their own marketing choices. "Most drivers in Europe move around in small, efficient hatchbacks without feeling like infants," Michael Austin of Car and Driver writes. "In here in America—the hell with the gas bill—size still matters. On the Continent, the social stigma that's attached to driving a very small car isn't as sinister and disapproving as it continues to be for small drivers in the U.S."

Maybe the typical Filipino smoker, who traditionally used his or her American cigarette's "choices," is slowly having a change of heart and going European for gigantes. Maybe driving around the cities now means it just isn't darn gigante as a 3.4-lit-per-liter SUV whenever the reason, the market for cigarettes, in particular the bulkheads, has reached a shakable level enough for a driver who breathes to exhale it.

The Ford Focus recently catches the attention for its Euro-inspired German appearance. On paper, the look would seem to match the performance. A 1.8-liter 20-HP engine with variable cam timing engine puts out a best in class 12.1/17.6/26.0 mpg and 132/hwy/40/25 mpg through the 5-speed dual clutch PowerShift transmission, marvelously an automatic checked a speed manual transmission.

The communication, on paper, promises the ease of an instant-on stop-and-go traffic, and the full efficiency of a manual transmission. In the real world? Only the not-picking-up-and-downing radio don't read the manual will comply about it: the Power-Rich communication is biased towards hot economy and the early squawks in the RPM band during light throttle conditions. However, drop the hammer and a jolt you in the face. There and where it shifts will depend on the driver's throttle inputs or on how much throttle the engine can take.

The Flare is a fun drive for those who love these gadgets. The integrated radio, automatic entertainment system with Bluetooth phone integration and auxiliary input (which also accepts a USB drive for those self-composed playlists) is a first for this segment of vehicles. Side-impact assessed intrusions, a standard rear spoiler and fog lights round everything up. Overall, Ford is pulling out all the stops and holding nothing back (except the horsepower) with the Flare.

With a price tag of $136,000, it costs $11,000 more than the next competitor. But in the cost of membership is the two-year scheduled maintenance and inflation cost. In turn, the Pima costs 22 percent less than what most people consider its direct competitor.

I swore never to bring my son to a photo studio again until....

How your child's beautiful memory is made

By Juan Manuel Papangelos
Contributor

I ONCE took my son to an apparently reputable photo studio for his first studio shoot. I was expecting quite a lot from the studio as it was a big production to get my baby and husband in a good mood for a shoot.

[Hummer: I was shocked] when I saw that all their pants were left in dusty drawers hanging on the floor. I loudly insisted when one of the staff took a rug from the floor and tried to put it on my son, to play with him. The photographer's nervous chucking at my son annoyed him and produced for him photographs while their sky-high prices for the prints [for substandard photos] annoyed me [his husband].

So there ya see we have never been back on a plastic straws for kids.

It was only when I discovered Mrs. Proby, the landlady of Quaid and Tanya de la Paz and their son, David Ed. Quaid, that I allowed my son to be in a photo studio once more.

The experience to him, Davis was enjoyable for both me and my wife, who, at the time of the photo shoot, was in a bad nursing mood.

The photographs of Mrs. Fluke were very professional. So baby talks here—they conversed with my son and the other child, then without scolding or infantile actions.

During the photo many of my son's favorite songs played in the background which were his (a famous American song).

"We did a lot of research about the music kids like, so more often than not we will have their favorite songs on hand," says Grand.

With the widespread viruses and bacteria that can be caught in public places where children gather, such as playgrounds and day-care, the message and staff at the Park are very much on guard.

"We get input from a lot of our friends who are menial who were very particular about cleanliness. That's why all our stuff is sanitized before and after every use, items the kids could put in their mouths are sanitized," says Brown.

Photography

There is a wide selection of costumes for your child to choose from when playing dress-up and lots of costume toys.

While other photo studios rush through the photo shoot, and moments seem a great moment, at Mrs. Platts the photographers understand the need to take time to make sure child had access.

I was impressed with the photographers, as they really know how to give direction and capture great shots that would

Call for entries to kiddie filmfest

MOVIEBUDDIES! Tug is holding the first-ever kiddie film festival called KID-4-All, which encourages children to write, produce and direct their very own short films. The theme is "Because I Can."

Tug calls on children aged seven to 12 years old to send in their short movies that will be the basis of their film. They can use a camera, still photos and/or a computer, as much as they want and more creative ideas to capture the attention of the screening committee, which will judge entries based on Creativity, Originality and Influence on the Theme.

Authors of short films entries will be notified in person, and the top five finalists who will receive the Tug Golden Ticket will get to attend a Showday KID-4-All Film Workshop.

Entries should be composed of a completed application form (with a short summary of the story) and an endorsement letter from the parent/guardian. All these have to be sent at "Tug KID-4-All Film Fest" in Cebu and Manila, Philippines, 25/F, Pinnacle One Building, 6th Avenue corner 27th St., First Escalante Global City, Taguig City 1434. Entries may also be sent online.

For more information on contest requirements and to download the form, visit www.tugkiddies.com/contests or search for Tug KID-4-All on www.facebook.com. Deadline is Oct. 20.

Daphne unveils 'Daphne'—her furniture line

DAPHNE Osella-Perez poses her background in art history into producing high-end pieces of classic furniture pieces.

Old World charm, contemporary chic

By Rita C. Vergara

BROADCASTER DAPHNE Osella-Perez has now ventured beyond her screen with the recent launching of her furniture line replete with Old World charm, but tinged with contemporary touches meant to appeal to a young market.

Simply dubbed as "Daphne," her initial furniture pieces consisting of carved and purely distressed chairs, sofas, dining room sets, side tables and console tables hand-crafted by some of the most skilled furniture makers from Europe are now available at Home's Home Furniture Collection.

"They all reflect my design sensibilities and my world, which resonates around my home," she says. "The collection evokes Old World charm, but done in a contemporary way."

Wood-framed and upholstered sofas, for instance, come with layers of savings, but instead of being heavy and bulky or too distressed, they are upholstered in the pickled natural-colored and high-quality linens for their versatility.

Many pieces are also made to fit most modern needs. For Christmas, Perez unveiled chairs with carved, gold-painted cushions on London. They come in a pair of daisies, in colors—from baby pink to Maroon Blue...and are perfect holiday presents.

"Each chair comes with a box. Since they're antique chairs, one piece is enough for a room," she said.

Classic forms

Made of kiln-dried mahogany, the wood used in Perez's furniture line is shaped and carved following classical forms. Most of the bigger pieces are painted in distressed ivory or grey and combined with vibrant colors such as vibrant egg blue. Curved styles are accented with brass inlays for that light, ornate touch.

"Some are a bit distressed, but not in a way that you would see normally," says Perez. "A lot of people think there are distressing their stuff, but ours is really done in a proper and methodical way."

Perez isn't stopping people from buying

Depending on the overall styling, homeowners could even come up with their own version of a Daphne apartment or Daphne La Plaza. And now on her personal strength to add some sparkle to a room.

"I didn't envision the whole," says Daphne, who studied art history (she's on Greek and Roman art) and urban planning at University of Toronto.

"I basically went back to old, classical forms and borrowed inspirations from the likes of Marie Antoinette."

She's confident there's a market for her kind of furniture. They're neither overdone nor heavily carved pieces typical of Filipino and Chinese antiques. But because of the workmanship that went into each piece, she hopes its intricate patterns, especially those in their 20s and 30s, will be a beauty of handcrafted pieces.

The development also positions Daphne, last of "Urban Daphne," as a lifestyle and design choice for 400,000, as perhaps a country's answer to Martha Stewart—she was the designer. It also puts her closer to her goal of launching a series of lifestyle brands revolving around the home.

market. But the line's home will always be classic and flow from frequent and other luxury residences.

Design inputs

"She is married," she says. "In fact, I'm convinced that I'm now doing retail. My mission of producing a line of lifestyle products for the home is starting to happen."

Linda Fane's lawyer son James and Lane (she lives here) are available at 100, where she initially has her own furniture collection. She's currently providing manufacturing with her design inputs. Her involvement in this last venture goes beyond marketing. She has been a much needed and needed development and design.

"She continuously working for the right choices, but my main focus right now is still on the capacity. We're also open to doing custom-made pieces, which take 10 to 15 days to make," she says.

Work on the furniture line began two years ago, just when Fane was launching her home collection. Since the line has been around in furniture or industrial design, she leaves the style policy in her partner's design room in Pangasinan.

"I don't own the factory, but I have to be the furniture line's designer," she points out. "I'm proud to say I work with one of the country's best furniture exporters, so the quality is of international standards."

She is more of an editor who also provides an overall direction to the entire of the line. In other words, she's simply perfecting her exposure to descriptive art in this setting up with something more functional.

Gabby to KC: Ignore rumors, petty issues

By Reynier Lee Dreyer

LIKE any protective father, actor Gabby Concepcion came swiftly to the defense of daughter KC Concepcion, who's currently entangled in a web of controversies.

According to tabloids, Meraldo Rodriguez allegedly questioned KC's authenticity as TV host, supposedly claiming that KC only got in the big leagues of her father's personal show, Concepcion Family.

"We know what is true and what is false," Gabby told Entertainment Weekly in an interview done for the day during a call from the heart of her father's "Kitsun House."

"None of KC had controversies, if not he has had work and talent, she wouldn't connect with him," he said. "I am confident one day KC will do it on her own, like her first special, musical support is his daughter."

Gabby added that he would advise KC not to let go, to ignore petty issues. "Show her a not show her without anyone. In any circumstances, I've had more trouble than success. If you're not in the business and just want to be a star, you're not in the business, so they say, people only like to see you in the business."

From 'teka' to techie

BY: JEFFREY A. ALO

For actor Dolly Wood, he always says, "I'm more of a teka because I always like a long pause when I come across a new gadget."

I always have to be in the bag, I'm more of a techie because I always like a long pause when I come across a new gadget."
